Leonard said that Police along with members of the public searched the coast line of Guana Bay all the way to Dawn Beach while another group consisting mostly Sheriff Security searched the bushes in Dawn Beach all the way to Oyster Pond. Leonard said that even youths on the island came out showing their concern on the whereabouts of the missing woman. Meanwhile, Police questioned the woman husband Frank Cordes five times in a row since he is the last person to see his wife. Frank Cordes told police that his wife a heavy drinker and gambler went to the Westin Casino on the night of January 11 by foot. Cordes said his wife, mother and himself spent most of the day in Grand Case eating and drinking and when he got home he left his drunken wife in the car sleeping. He said that the woman later entered the house when someone opened the door of the car and she asked him for money to go the casino to gamble. Ever since then the man said he has not seen or heard from his wife. In the meantime, SMN News received reliably information that the man and his wife had an argument the day she disappeared. Several US media houses who have been following the case reported the couple had trouble in their marriage over the years. While the Federal Bureau of Investigations has offered their help to assist local police in the case have been following leads in the US territory prior to coming on the island.
